Ms. Hendrix,

Below is my last email, sent on March 27. Please see the question in the second paragraph.

I followed up on the calls to your office, and it was indeed a summer intern tasked by my legal assistant with following up with agencies by phone. Apologies, again, for the cryptic calls.

Very best,

Nate

Claudia,

I was mistaken, according to Detective Middleton we never ended up using the equipment. No one

The triggerfish was made available to the task force not just GPD and Detective Middleton is a UPD officer assigned to DTF. I don't know if that makes a difference. Also we don't have any MOU with ATF. I'm in Orlando at a conference this week but I will be glad to respond to any other questions that help you clear this up.

Matt,

The below question is a clarifying question from the ACLU/Mr. Wessler regarding "records related to cell site simulator-type equipment that is owned by the Florida Department of Law Enforcement or another public or private entity and made available to the GPD in particular investigations, including any mutual aid agreements covering this technology and any records from specific investigations where the equipment was used. Could you please confirm that your office has searched for these types of records as well"?

He is aware from the earlier information from late March that we do not own any equipment that is capable of capturing any cell numbers etc.

Thank you,

I have a clarifying question: Your response indicates that the Gainesville Police Department does not now "own" any equipment of the type described in the ACLU's public records request. Our request also seeks records related to cell site simulator-type equipment that is owned by the Florida Department of Law Enforcement or another public or private entity and made available to the GPD in particular investigations, including any mutual aid agreements covering this technology and any records from specific investigations where the equipment was used. Could you please confirm that your office has searched for these types of records as well?

Thank you for your assistance.

Sincerely,
Nate
