	involvement in the planning and promotion of religious baccalaureate services.
	These reported activities may be part of a broader pattern of disregard for every student's right to remain free from government-imposed religious viewpoints. Last school year, New Heights Middle School in Chesterfield County sponsored a school-day assembly featuring a Christian rapper and a youth minister who preached to students and urged them to sign pledges dedicating themselves to Jesus. The assembly was just the tip of the iceberg: The constitutional yiolations at the school district were numerous and nervasive. These activities did not ston until
